“Make the space easily accessible for seniors”

“Please provide area for kids but don't turn the library into a loud community center...(that's the model that the anything libraries have done; I prefer the college hill library model in Westminster)”

There are many examples of interactive art pieces that I would love to see something created especially for an area of the library that captures the imagination. Kinetic Art for example can set a calming mood.

Add a Friends of the Library bookstore to sell donated items.

I really enjoy your annual visiting author/speaker programs. With so few bookstores left, the library is left holding the bag, which could be an opportunity.

It's wonderful to see plenty of activity at the library these days for gathering, socializing & learning! Sadly though, this may also be the only place some people can go to do research, homework, etc. & for those who may have PTSD, ADD or be sound sensitive it's almost impossible to get enough peace to concentrate on the task at hand, even in the designated “quiet” areas,

A hand-drawn sketch on a light-colored background, possibly paper or fabric, featuring several overlapping circles and ovals. The circles are drawn with dark, scribbled lines, some of which are filled with diagonal hatching. A large, light-colored oval is on the right side. The sketch is overlaid with a grid of thin, dark lines. The text "BUBBLE DIAGRAMS" is written in large, bold, blue capital letters across the center of the sketch.
